

Souvenir opens at The Rollins Museum of Art
Saturday, January 17, 2026

The Rollins Museum of Art is pleased to announce the opening of its highlight winter exhibition, Souvenir, on Saturday, January 17, 2026. The exhibition will remain on view through May 10.

Souvenirs represent a fraught space that engages the sacred, the commercial, and the aesthetic. They merge the ephemeral practice of pilgrimage with the material world. Souvenirs offer portals to specific times and places and illustrate the stories we tell about who we are and what we value. When souvenirs are scaled-down versions of monumental structures, like a miniature Eiffel Tower, they allow us to carry and comprehend an overwhelmingly large experience. Our natural tendency to associate memories with objects has resulted in practices such as pilgrims collecting fragments from holy sites, and the mass production of mementos.

The history of museums can be traced back to cabinets of curiosities, which displayed artifacts from the natural world and items collected during the Grand Tour. Contemporary artists offer a critical perspective on the history of collecting and consumption.

"Many of these artists are fellow young academics whose work I've been thinking about for years," explains Souvenir co-curator Audrey Hope, MFA, Assistant Professor of Art, Rollins College. "Their work brought up questions about the manufacture of cultural patrimony for tourist consumption, technologies of display, and the disturbing histories of souvenirs in the South. I wanted to bring a strong presence of artists who are asking significant questions with their work right now."

Curated together with Dr. Gisela Carbonell, Curator at the Rollins Museum of Art, the exhibition explores the intertwined histories of travel and collecting in visual art through transhistorical dialogues. Souvenir features a selection of works from the museum's collection alongside strategic loans that enhance this conversation.

"I was surprised how many works in our collection explore the themes of travel, collecting, and memory across different historical periods. With Prof. Hope's expertise, we organized a show that we hope will broaden opportunities to engage students, faculty, and the community by presenting familiar objects in a wider context. We considered history, popular culture, technology, memory, and storytelling to explore a topic that is familiar yet intriguing." Gisela Carbonell, Ph.D., Curator, Rollins Museum of Art

For example, Haim Steinbach's Untitled (Travel Bag) places an iconic blue Pan Am travel bag inside a wooden frame and glass shelf, blending the visual language of museums and retail stores. The bag is a relic of Pan American World Airways, which pioneered modern air travel. It symbolizes the idolization of travel as leisure, celebrates objects representing global mobility, and evokes nostalgia for an idealized past.

In Louvre, as pictured above by Carrie Mae Weems, the artist stands with her back turned towards the camera in front of I.M. Pei's iconic pyramid. Her quiet contemplation serves as a form of protest and a testament to years of discriminatory collecting and exhibiting practices. As a woman of color and an artist, she performs at each site she photographs, evoking years of exclusion and reminding us of how much ground we still need to cover on the path to equality.

And, a more abstract example, Organ Exchange, by brothers Einar and Jamex de la Torre, is inspired by a personal experience with a kidney transplant needed for a relative. The work is a reflection on the value of the human body versus its parts and encourages viewers to consider this transfer between living people as a form of exchange, akin to the movement of goods across borders (as the brothers now live and work on both sides of the border, in San Diego and Ensenada).

"Audrey Hope and Gisela Carbonell's collaboration showcases the powerful synergy of an academic art museum, where faculty scholarship meets curatorial expertise to bring new perspectives to the public." Leslie Anderson, MBA, Bruce A. Beal Executive Director, Rollins Museum of Art
